

Around the World

with Stan Delaplaine

Airlines have only missed once on getting my baggage on the plane with me. But I flew all the way to an important story in Norway and forgot to bring my typewriter. Flew to London for a formal dinner with all my social climbing irons. Except, Sam, I forgot the Tuxedo pants.

From such disasters, I worked out a procedure. (I go to Europe next week.) I set up a flight bag a week in advance and drop things into it as I think of them. Passport and tickets. Pen-size flashlight. (It's murder to stumble around a strange hotel room in the dark.) Swiss Army knife. (With the bottle opener and corkscrew for roadside lunches.) Rubber bottle stopper. (European bottled water rarely has a cork.)

Other booby traps: If you hang your ties on door knobs, you're going to lose a lot of ties. While you are downstairs for breakfast, the maid will make up your room and hide your pajamas under the pillow. When you come up to pack, you'll never remember them.

"Would we have any problem getting a good English-speaking doctor anywhere in Europe?"

Not in the big cities. You should get one through your hotel, the airline, a U.S. Consul. There are two organizations that list such doctors—IAMAT at 745 Fifth avenue, New York City, and Intermedic, 777 Third Avenue, New York City.

IAMAT card is free from the office or from a travel agent. The letter with the card says they depend on donations. (I've had a few complaints that they don't answer letters. One that they didn't answer their telephone.) Intermedic listings costs $5 or $9 for a family. (Never had any comments on this one.)

"What do you think about two boys (high school age) who want to hitchhike in Mexico?"

I never see anybody hitchhiking in Mexico. So I figure it's rough going. Maybe Mexicans don't pick them up. And Americans are a little nervous in a strange country. Buses are cheap in Mexico. That would be my idea.

"We have thought of spending some time in Mexico. We are retired. Is it possible for me to go into real estate business there?"

You have to live there five years on a resident immigrant basis before you are allowed to work. Or you can work immediately at your own business if you invest $16,000 in it.

"Will my hair dryer work on a cruise ship?"

You'll have to ask the shipping line. Last trip I was on had a notice posted saying not to use ANY electrical equipment.

You know all these ships have a beauty parlor. And book ALL your appointments the first day. On special night's—the Captain's dinner—every wren on board wants to get her hair done. By night, everyone's so mad they aren't speaking to each other.

"For a going away present, I've heard of a leather case that carries everything. Passport, tickets, baggage checks, money, travelers checks..."

I think this is a good way to lose everything. All at once in one package. But if you must—Mark Cross has them in San Francisco and New York. Elegant and expensive.

"We like a little coffee in our hotel room at night. There's something you buy to heat it..."

It's a small immersion coil. Works on your current—and has some warnings on use that makes me think you could get a roaring shock. (However, I've used them a lot and never got a jolt.) Many hardware stores have them. Travel departments in department stores. Abercrombie and Fitch in San Francisco and New York. From 98 cents to $4—some have fancy cases.

Be sure to get an adapter plug to fit European outlets.
